

Video of the people and process behind Kraftwurx

Posted by scottyd - 2011/12/04 13:43

---

Kraftwurx,

While I'm reading it seems that you guys are based out of Texas. I'm glad to see you're within the states. I also noticed that you have a YouTube page with a few videos underlining the process to set up and configure our control panels for selling, and organizing.

I'm more interested in the history, and process of the Kraftwurx team and it's 3D printing technology. I'm curious if the Kraftwurx staff would be willing to provide high definition video at a minimum of 1280 by 720 of the people and process behind Kraftwurx. I think this would provide a sense of community, security, and ensure us that you are interested in helping us.

I also believe that it would help generate more traffic. Some of the forum posts here date back a few weeks to what I assume is the founding of this website. I have no doubt that you all share in an investment. From all that I've read about this process I benefit from using your services, and you benefit from my content.

It would be very cool to see new video of this technology in use, and the things that can be created from it. I've already spent more than a day straight watching videos, looking at images, and reading information on the process behind 3D printing and want more!

I'm also interested in sticking with Kraftwurx. A new service needs it's support if it wants to survive.
:side:

=====

Re:Video of the people and process behind Kraftwurx

Posted by Marco CM - 2011/12/08 20:08

---

Great idea ScottyD. We completely agree with your point of making a video of the staff. There usually isn't enough hours in the day, but we DO plan to make many videos soon. Also very soon we will photograph the entire staff. FYI, Kraftwurx is a tight team of 9. We are made up of artists, engineers, web developers, and more. We feel like more of a family than a rigid company. So we are happy to invite you into our 3d printing family. Thank you for sticking with us. I as Community Manager will ensure we answer your needs.

Summary, More to come soon, stay tuned!

=====