

bureaus and sellers

Posted by christos georgoulas - 2013/06/05 13:05

Good evening Kraftwurx

I am a new user here, just registered.

I am very interested to know about how things work, around here.

I have a question about bureaus and sellers.

For example, I live in Greece and I own a 3D printer, that makes me a bureau. Let's say that someone from Turkey or Bulgaria likes a design of mine or someone else's and he want to 3D print it and order it. Now because I am the nearest bureau the order comes to me via Kraftswurx and I am responsible for shiping the order to him, am I right?

So I am making money for printing the object and for selling a design of mine and a percentage goes to Kraftswurx, correct me if I am wrong.

Now a seller doesn't own a 3D printer, just uploads the design on Kraftswurx and shares it to the world. He makes money just for selling his design and again a percentage goes to Kraftswurx. Am I right about those and how things work?

Please don't redirect me to another link about terms of use. I just read them.

Thank you in advance.

=====

Re:bureaus and sellers

Posted by Marco CM - 2013/06/07 14:36

You are generally correct about how Kraftwurx works. We allow artists to upload designs for sale as 3d printed products. When those designs sell a printer in our production network prints the part closes to the customer. We operate with a 25 point quality inspection for all 3d prints and offer only the highest quality industrial grade 3d print materials. This excludes most low-end home use 3d printers and machines. No hobby 3d printers or MakerBots. Are you a hobbieist 3d printer or a full fledged 3d printing service providing company?

=====