

3D printing for the wrong reasons

Posted by Waldo - 2011/11/15 15:00

---

Check out this article, a specialized gang used 3D printing to create a card skimmer!

<http://krebsonsecurity.com/2011/09/gang-used-3d-printers-for-atm-skimmers/>

=====

Re:3D printing for the wrong reasons

Posted by Bryce - 2011/11/15 15:33

---

I wonder what else they could 3D print... counterfeit keys?

=====

Re:3D printing for the wrong reasons

Posted by admin - 2011/11/16 01:05

---

Great question...Kraftwurx will not knowingly help commit any crime. While we cannot be certain what everything is that is being printed. If we do catch something, we may report it. For example: I.materialise recently made a statement about Credit Card Skimmers.

We will not print these either! If we suspect it may be illegal we will investigate and potentially take down the offending item(s).

We want Kraftwurx to be a safe and fun environment.

=====

Re:3D printing for the wrong reasons

Posted by admin - 2011/11/29 23:53

---

A silencer for 3D print or at least that is what it looked like is the most sinister thing I have seen!

=====

Re:3D printing for the wrong reasons

Posted by Waldo - 2011/12/02 15:25

---

admin wrote:

A silencer for 3D print or at least that is what it looked like is the most sinister thing I have seen!

It could just be a 13mm threaded tube, nothing sinister about that!

=====

Re:3D printing for the wrong reasons

Posted by Abby - 2011/12/03 01:12

---

And here I was considering making 3D Mattel toy knock-offs doing risque things ... but I thought Mattel might sue me, so I'd better not.

=====

Re:3D printing for the wrong reasons

Posted by Waldo - 2011/12/06 11:37

---

Might be a safe bet to avoid getting sued haha; However, I don't see what the issue would be if you didn't essentially 3D scan the toys.

=====